General, 79, Leaves 'France a Widow'

By James Goldsborough

PARIS, Nov. 10 .- "Gen. de Gaulle is dead. France is a widow." With these words President Georges Pompidou told a nationwide television audience today that his illustrious predecessor was dead. It was a brief message, barely a minute long, ending with the words, "May De Gaulle live eternally."

The world learned of the death of the seventy-nine-year-old general, 14 hours after he slumped over a table at his home in Colombey-les-Deux-Eglises while playing a game of solitaire at 7 o'clock last night. The news was kept at Colombey until this morning when the Elysée Palace was notified. Mr. Pompidou was told upon rising. The Elysée notified the press at 9:30 this morning. So sudden, so unexpected came the news that the first French reaction was disbelief. When the radios confirmed it, telephone switchboards broke down under the weight of mass telephoning. The flag at the Elysee was not lowered until aimost noon, because, an official explained, people were too stunned to act.

One of the first official announcements was that Thursday would be a day of national mourning. Tomorrow is Armis-tice Day. Later, when it was learned that De Gaulle in his last testament expressly esked for a simple juneral et Colombey, it was decided to hold a memorial service Thursday at Notre-Dame de Paris. Messages immediately began coming in from world leaders who wished to ettend.

Thursday, government offices, post offices, national theaters and schools will remain closed. Special trains and buses will be put on to take mourners to De Gaulie's testa-Colombey. ment, though discouraging of ficial attendance, invites the common man to his funeral.

Thursday will mark the beginning of an official 30-day period of mourning. .

The General and the U.S.—New Insight

By C. L. Sulzberger

PARIS, NOV. 10 (NYT) .-Although Charles de Gaulle had a long record of disagree-ments with the United States and made no secret of his fear American hegemony threatened willy-nilly to dominate the world, he had come by the end of his long political career to believe that major differences between Washington and Paris were coming to an

On Feb. 14, 1969, two months before his resignation on April 28, I had my last long talk with the general as chief of state. Until now I have held the record of this conversation in confidence, although he permitted me to take extensive notes, scribbling them on a pad

THE CEREMONY will be arranged by my son, my daughter, my son-in-law, my daughter-in-law, assisted by my staff, in such a manner that it he extremely simple. I want no national funeral. NO SPEECH may be pronounced, either at the church or elsewhere. No funeral oration in parliament. No place reserved during the ceremony, except for my family for my fellow members of the Order of the Liberation, for the Municipal Council of Colombey. "Your reply is going to determine the destiny of France," an intense, solemn yet aged voice told the French people on April 25, 1969, "because if I am disavowed by the majority of you . . . my present task as chief of state would obviously become impossible [and] I would immediately stop exercising my functions.

That curiously aloof yet paternal voice, which in 1940 had exhorted a prostrate nation to rise from defeat and fight on against a merciless and omnipresent enemy, and which in the years after 1958 had railied a country to grandeur and glory beyond its size and resources. had now lost the compelling eloquence that, less than a year earlier, had seemed invincible. Thus it was that two days after his appeal for confidence over a relatively minor issue, Charles de Gaulle was repudiated by 53 percent of the voters, and within 12 hours he departed the splendorous Elysée Palace of French Presidents, his residence for almost 11 yeers, for his plain home in the tiny village of Colombey-les-Daux-Eglises. More than the end of a singular political reign, it was the end ni an era. That era started virtually unobserved on June 18, 1940, when an obscure temporary brigadier general having escaped to Lon-don from a battered and disorganized France about to capitulate to Nazi Germany. exhorted his countrymen to continue in a war that he perceived would evolve into a world

'Must We Abandon?'

But has the last word been said?" the 49-year-old officer asked in his pungent speech in a British Broadcasting Corp. studio. "Must we abandon all hope? Is our defeat final and irremediable? To those questions I answer-No!

"For remember this, France is not alone. She is not alone. She is not alone. Behind ber is a vast empire, and she can make common cause with the British Empire, which commands the seas and is continuing the struggle ..."

He concluded with these characteristically self-confident words: "L General de Gaulle, now in London, invite French officers and men who are at present on British soil or may be in the future, with or with-out their arms; I invite engineers and skilled workmen from the armaments factories who are at present on British soil, or may be in the future, to get in touch with me.

'L'Homme du Destin'

"Whatever happens, the flame of French resistance must not and shall not die." Very few Frenchmen heard that impromptu broadcast; and at first very few harkened to it. In Britain, too, De Gaulle was unknown except by a few cabinet ministers and Prime Minister Winston Churchill. Churchill, however, had an intuitive confidence in him, having already addressed him as "Thomme du destin."

"He carried with him in his small airplane the honor of France," Churchill wrote later of the general's flight to Bri-

Although it seemed ludicrous to some that De Gaulle, with a mere 100,000 francs and a handful of volunteers, could put together a Free French cause, the general exuded total faith in himself.

When leaders fail," he wrote, "new leaders are projected upward out of the eternal spirit of France: from Charlemagne to Joan of Arc to Napoleon, Poincaré and Clémenceau. Perhaps this time I am one of those thrust into leadership by the failure of others."

And, alluding to his self-conceived mission, he wrote in "The Call to Honor." the first hook of his three-volume war memoirs: "What I was determined to save was the French Nation and the French State. I had to bring back into the

In a tone that appeared to derive from Louis XIV, he added: "C'était à moi d'assumer la France," ("It was up to me to take responsibility for France.")

Merger of Identities

This merger of identities-in which De Gaulle believed himself to be the incarnation of the "Nation" standing superior to factions—accounted for many of his actions, just as it reiled His certainty that he was

France ("Je suis la France," he declared in 1940) sustained him through many mutations of fortune before the country's liberation in mid-1944. And it emboldened him when he was shaping the Fifth Republic, decolonizing the empire, freeing Algeria, creating a nuclear capability and fashloning a foreign policy designed to give France an independent world stature. His certainty, which some saw as hubris, or arrogance, also contributed to his downfall—to his blindness to the domestic economic disaffections that turned public opinion against him.

As he emerged in 1940. De Gaulle appeared tailored to the role of a man of destiny. Describing him after his mitial broadcast, Pierre Bourdan

"I saw a man of another age. Very tall [he was 6 feet 4 inches], he was wearing a uniform and leggings and held himself extremely straight. But this erertness, accentuated by his thrownback head and by his arms, which followed exactly the line of his body, seemed a natural and comfortable position for him . . . "The bearing of his head so very remote, and the expression of his face showed his inof his eyes was that they were oblivious of the outer world. Their expression could not change to suit the mood of the people around him. Their look seemed preordained."

His Finest Hour

It was this hauteur that permitted him to stride into the Pantheon of heroes in August, 1944, as he led a Paris liberation parade from the Arch of Triumph to Notre Dame. Cheered by two million people in an explosion of national fervor, he experienced his finest hour, his apotheosis.

It was this hauteur, too, that exasperated Allied leaders dur-

"The Cross of Lorraine (De Gaulle's emblem] was the heaviest cross I have ever had to bear." Churchill once bristled. although he conceded in another context. "Never mind, he defied all. . .

President Franklin D. Roosevelt's relations with De Gaulle were hostile from the outset. Suspicious of the general, Roosevelt saw him as "more and more unbearable." as petty, vainglorious and, potentially, a dictator.

These attitudes, reinforced by gossip from French exiles in the United States and by adverse reports from the State Department and from pro-Vichy diplomats, involved the United States in a search for alter-natives to De Gaulle up to the liberation of Paris.

Difficulties With U.S. One result of the President's mistrust was to foster in the hypersensitive De Gauile an animosity toward the United States. He never forgot that the United States tried to maneuver him into turning over Free French leadership to Gen. Henri Honoré Giraud in 1943; that the United States did not recognize the French National Committee until mid-1944, and then only grudgingly; and that Roosevelt had blackballed him from Yalta.

De Gaulle was convinced on the basis of his own experience that the United States, in the war and later, was seeking "to settle Europe's future in France's absence." This sentiment hardened and in the 1960s ed to invest events with as much pomp as they could wear, he skimped on his state banquets. A rapid eater, he set the pace for his guests, who often had their plates snatched away three-quarters full. These repasts were without fruit the thought fruit took too much time to peel). Family Background

Of his decision in 1940 to try conventional.

Henri Charles's father, was lay headmaster of the Jesuit College of the Immaculate Conception in Paris when his son was born. Charles's mother, Jeanne Maillot-Delannoy, was his father's cousin and, like her husband, she was intensely patriotic and conservative.

In childhood, Charles was much exposed to family con-named secretary to the High Council of National Defense, a post that he held for five years and that brought him into everyday touch with the country's military leaders.

The job also gave him his first closeup view of par-liamentary politics, by which he was not favorably impressed, for in five years no fewer than 14 cabinets came and went.

'A Modern Army'

De Gaulle's career up to this point had not been brilliant, despite Pétain's patronage. One reason was the officer's spitand-polish personality; another was his scholarly but unorthodox book, "Vers l'Armée de Métier." ("Toward a Modern Army"), published in 1934.

Scornful of several pet army doctrines, including conscription, the book also disparaged the Maginot Line, a supposedly impregnable fortress system the Franco-German border. Equally upsetting to. the reigning military minds was De Gaulle's proposal for a modernised army with an elite mobile tank force at its head. This striking force, he argued, could overrun and disorganize enemy territory, which later could be occupied by foot sol;

When World War II broke out, De Gaulle was a colonel in command of a tank regiment in Metz. When Hitler turned on France, the debacle that De Gaulle had foreseen took place: the Maginot Line was turned and northern France was overrun by Nazi tenks. In the sweep. De Gaulle, with his meager force, gave a good account of himself and was made a temporary brigadier general. Premier Paul Reynaud brought him into the cabinet June 5, 1940, as under secretary of de-

It was about then that he came to his momentous decisionthat events made it evident that Britain would remain in the war, that it would become worldwide and that he would try to organize French resisfance hased on the colonies.

Flight to London

When the discomfited French government sued for an armistice, De Gaulle took flight to Assuming there the epic task of organizing a resistance he was recognized June 28 by the British government "as the leader of all the Free French."

With a mystique already sprouting around him, De Gaulle was able, by claiming to embody France (and no one challenged him then), to draw into his cause the governors of French Equatorial Africa Chad and the French Cameroons.

The edge, however, was taken off his first successes when his small naval expedition to Dakar was easily repulsed by the Vichy garrison. The failure made American recognition of the Vichy regime seem plausible. The setback also held down his following inside France.

But a month later, in June. 1941, the Soviet Union's entrance into the war dramatically altered De Gaulle's fortunes by producing two important developments: direct Free French contact with the Russians and the start of an active Resistance in France, now organized by the energetic French Com-munist party. Ultimately, in July, 1943, the Soviet Union set its seal upon De Gaulle as the Resistance leader. By then the underground war in France was a flourishing armed enterprise of men and women of many political convictions.

Murky Dealings

Meanwhile, De-Gaulle organ ized in September, 1941, the French National Committee, a virtual government-in-exile; with himself as chairman. But Roosevelt sought an alternative to De Gaulle, someone more complaisant

The choice fell on Gen. Giraud, who was taken out of France to North Africa, where he was appointed French com-mander in chief in late 1942 and later civil commander as In these murky dealings, De Gaulle could not be ignored completely, for he had support in the colonies and in France. Roosevelt and Churchill brought De Gaulle and Giraud together in January, 1943, and a fragile alliance was fabricated. But Giraud, with his conservative associations and his political ineptitude, was sacked as co-chairman of the Committee of Netional Liberation within a year, Even in control of the committee, however, De Gaulle did not have the confidence of the Americans as the man to govern France after D-Day.

Circumventing Pritain and the United States, the De Gaulle Committee declared itself the Provisional Government of France; and then, on June 13, 1944, the general and a ting group of sides made a quick, almost stealthy, trip to Bayeur, where he received a hearty welcome and where he appointed a Gaullist governor for Normandy. De Gaulle did not return to France until Aug. 20, having meantime met with Roosevelt in Washington and established a superficially cordial relationship, One result was Washington's recognition of his com-

Tempest' Unloosed

The "tempest" that brought De Gaulle back to public life and power was the war in Algeria, under way since 1954. Fourth Republic, already stung by the loss of Indochina was bedeviled by the conflict against the Algerian nationalists. By 1958, many French troops were in Algeria attempting to contain 15,000 insurgents.

The Pope sent messages of condolences to Mr. Pompidou

In the message to De Gaulle's widow, the Pope said he learned of his death "with keen emotion and great pain." He sent her a special apostolic blessing. In Moscow, the Soviet news media briefly reported the death of De Gaulle without any official comment. Comment in Russia will not be forthcoming easily because of the dichotomous Soviet at-titude to the late president which hovered between con-

Arabs Grieve

From the Arabian peninsula to North Africa, the departed general was portrayed as the architect of the "golden era of Prench-Arah relations." Algerian President Houari Boumedienne said that De Gaulle, after assuming "the tragic destinies of France . . . was able to conceive in a noble and generous vision what should be the future of the Algerian and French peoples . . . history will remember what France and all of humanity owe to him." The Egyptian government declared a seven-day official mourning for "one of the rare leaders of the 20th century who

world peace." Lebanon's Loss

"Lebanon has lost a great friend," sald Lebanese President Suleiman Franjieh, "De Gaulle has left his mark on history." Lebanon will observe three days of official mourning.

French-speaking Africa react-ed with grief to the death of De Gaulle, the man they considered their liberator from French colonial rule.

Leopold Sedar Senghor of Senegal decreed three days of national mourning and told Mr. Pompidou in a message of condolence that not only had De Gaulle saved France, but "he also permitted us, without spilling of blood or dispute, to realize our ideal of independence."

In Tunis, government minister Mahmoud Masmoudi said De Gaulle was the only French leader "to understand the anachronism of an empire which cost France more than it brought it."

'In Madrid, Francisco Franco sent a telegram of condolence to Mr. Pompidon. "Profoundly moved by the unexpected news of the death of the great statesman Gen, de Gaulle, Please accent the sincerest sympathy of the Spanish people, the govern-ment and myself."

and his defeat.

PARIS, Nov. 10.—Gen. Charles de Gaulle left office abruptly on April 28, 1969, after nearly 11 years in power. For the remaining 18 months of his life. he refrained from all political activity, did not see the members of the new government and never returned to Paris.

He was described by those few politicians to call on him in his retirement as a man who had thrown himself completely into the completion of his memoirs, He worked furiously on the first volume on his "Memoirs of Hope," and saw it published last month nearly six weeks ahead of schedule. He was working on the third chapter second volume on the day he died.

Seldom has a statesman of his influence withdrawn so completely from the political scene. When De Gaulle had retired abruptly once before-in 1946 when he stepped down as head of the provisional government— he described himself as returning to his home "and to his

· Deeply Wounded

Those who saw him in recent months would say the same. The defeat of the April 27 referendum on the decentralization of Prance wounded him deeply. The French people had shown their ingratitude once again. His retirement was completely voluntary, but it was completely in the Gaullist character.

The defeat was not the only wound he bore. Much has been written in the intervening months to the effect that De Gaulle felt he was hastened out of power by Georges Pompidou's declaration early in 1969 that he would be a candidate for the presidency when De Gaulle was gone. De Gaulle immediately announced that he was not gone and had no intention of going. but the damage was done. Two months later, the people, per-haps thinking that Gaullism needed a new chief, turned down the referendum. Two more months later, they overwhelmingly elected Mr. Pompidou

For whatever the reasons, De Gaulle retired completely. At Colombey, aside from members of his family, he saw only those faithful Gaullists who were out of the government, mostly his former ministers, such as Maurice Couve de Murville. Pierre Messmer, Andre Malraux and Jean-Marcel Jeanneney.

When Mr. Pompidou was elected president on June 15, 1969. De Gaulle, then on vacation in Ireland, responded with the brief message, "For all possible national and personal reasons, I send you my cordial felicitations." Aside from that, it was official silence, broken only oc-casionally with a personal message for some departed leader or friend, the last one sent six weeks ago upon the death of Egyptian President Gamal Abdel Nasser.

Visited Spain, Ireland

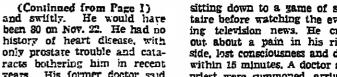

During his retirement, the general took two vacations, the first in Ireland, where he visited the graves of his Celtic ancestors, and the second, last summer, to Spain, where he met Generalissimo Francisco Franco for the first time. On both these trips, he was accompanied by his wife, Yvonne.

Despite his silence, his refusal to offer either criticism or encouragement to his successors, the shadow from Colombey easily reached the capital, There were those Gaullists who blamed Mr. Pompidou for the defeat of the referendum and who were only too ready to judge De Gaulle's successors as neretics.

But if De Gaulle offered no succor to his successors, neither did he aid their detractors. His silence was total—and deafening. And if the new government kept closely to Gaullist doctrine in foreign policy, it could not be only prostate trouble and cataracts bothering him in recent vests. His former doctor said not long ago he had uever seen him with a cold. Mr. Pompidou met with Prime Minister Jacques Chaban-Delmas throughout the morning to deal with the problem of funeral arrangements. The problem was obviously complicated when Mr. Pompidou read the last testament that De Gaulle had given him in 1952, on his funeral arrangements. Though De Gaulle could have been expectcd to be huried at Les Invalides, alongside Napoléon and other French beroes, he did not want

He asked that he be buried at Colombey near the grave of his daugnter Anne, who died in 1948. Neither president, nor ministers nor parliamentarians were to attend, though he approved of some military repre-sentation. He asked for a simple ceremony, without music, fanfare or bells.

Little Street Reaction

There was very little reaction in the streets this morning, since Frenchmen were already at work when they learned the news. About 150 persons gathered outside the Elysèe as the ministers came to a 12:30 cabinet meeting, hut they were encouraged to move on by the police.

By this evening, however, long lines had formed outside the Paris office that the government had provided for De Gaulle when he retired following defeat of a referendum last year. He never returned to Paris following the defeat.

There was no mass emotional outburst. If Frenchmen mourned, they mourned silently, privately. They bought out the first editions of France-Soir and La Croix, the first newspapers out with the news, and walked along the streets reading. They telephoned. One woman collapsed outside the Elysée. A few tears could be seen on some on the street. Aside from that there was outward calm.

The testimony from Gaullists and opposition alike, however, indicated that they both felt the national loss, Opposition leaders all praised the general, the Communist party remembering that despite later differences they had fought side by side during the Resistance.

De Gaulle was stricken after spending an hour working on his memoirs and just as he was sitting down to a game of soll-taire before watching the even-ing television news. He cried out about a pain in his right side, lost consciousness and died within 15 minutes. A doctor and priest were summoned, arriving shortly after death.

De Gaulle Dead, 'France a Widow'

It was then that Mrs. de Gaulle summoned their children, Philippe de Gaulle and Elisabeth de Boissieu, to Colombey in eastern France from Paris. Only many hours later, when the family was reunited. did thoughts turn to notifying the world

The priest who was called in to administer last rites said later of Mrs. de Gaulle, "In spite of her great chagrin she was in constant control of herself at all times."

The testament, the details of which had been unknown to Mr. Pompidou, clearly presented major problems for the gov-ernment. De Gaulle states very firmly that he wants no violation of his wishes, which put the government in the awkward position of being unable to pay customary respects to a national hero.

The solution was found in seperate ceremonies, one in Co-lombey for "the men and women of France and of other

U.S.-French Relations

I was about to leave France on a long trip that would take me through the Middle East, South Asia, East Aria and North America and President Nixon was due to arrive in Paris, on his only state visit to De Gaulle that Feb. 28. For this reason, as I recorded in my notes (little knowing that by the time I returned to Paris the general would have voluntarily withdrawn once more to political exile. I asked him if he felt that because there was now a new administration in Washington it would be easier to improve Franco-U.S. relationships. He said-and here I quote him directly:

"I think this process had al-ready begun before President Johnson left office. Our relations were starting to get better during the last months of hie administration. The tendency toward rapprochement had begun while Johnson still was President and for natural reasons. But right now it is even easier to further this tendency because of developments. It is not a question of presidents, of Johnson or Nixon, but of the problems posed.

subject for discussion as far as we are concerned. There is no NATO for us French so there on this with Washington. (Here I must explain that by this De Gaulle meant France was no longer in the NATO 'organization' although it remained a partner in the North Atlantic Treaty.)

Long Negotiations

'Then there was Vietnam. But President Johnson started negotiations while he was still in office. The negotiations are bound to go on for a very long time. That is inevitable. But it has started and, in the end, it will lead to peace.

There is no reason for major differences between us now. Our problems are on the road to regulation. Of course, there is the question of the Middle East. We have not been in accord with you on this since 1967 [the six-day warl. But you should following because that is the practical approach."

On Military Strategy

I asked if he thought it would be useful when Mr. Nixon was here, to discuss the possibility of coordinating U.S. and French military strategy. The general was very dubious about this. He

"Not hy NATO. It can't he done by NATO. That's the point. Yes, oventual coordination perbaps. But we don't want NATO. NATO is an integration and we don't want an alliance structure within which the United States integrates all the others.

Without NATO, it would he easy to coordinate things between the U.S. and French general staffs. They could arrange cooperation and coordination of forces in case of war. But that is not possible now. You use NATO as the basis for your European defense. You are obliged to. And you cannot make special arrangements with France outside of NATO because of this fact and the obvious resentment this would provoke among other NATO members. That would be very difficult."

I then observed that in the past he had told me no country in the long run could avoid being drawn into the orbit of influence of one or the other Russia and Americe. Was he worried about this possibility now? He answered: "That is not quite right, not precisely what I told you. Let me explain. Since always we have favored the United States. Historically, we have always heen friends. This has been for various reasons, world reasons, the nature of the country. ideology. Also we have never been rivals before. Remember, in the past you were never in Africa, in Asia, or even in

"Also you should remember that we have old reasons for being friends of Russia. For us, in Europe, this Russian friendship has always been necessary as a counterweight to Germany. Constantly in history we have sought to be on good terms with Russia, with the Czars, with the Soviets, as a counterweight to Germany. We have been old friend; with America and old ailies of Russia. And that Franco-Russian feeling is a natural event.

Break Unjustified

"Today we have no reason to renounce friendship with the United States. Neither, especially now that Germany reemerges, have we any reason to break off with Russia.

"And another thing, something you should never forget, is that one must always remember what France was, historically, just after the war and what it is today. France is as it is and the French are as they are. If the French don't think of France, it disappears. But you cannot think of France if you loss a sense of independence. The friendship of the French for the United States requires no American hegemony.

"The same is true of Russia It is for that reason that the Communists have never succeeded here; for national reasons, not for social reasons,

"Germany has been demolished, has been cut in two. And we must remember that Germany has only been one country for a relatively short period of time. Germany's history is not the same as that of France. The Germans are readier to accept a United States hegemony. [And here, I noted, De Gaulle flashed 'a malevolent quick smile']. They can't avoid

"As for Britain, Britain has renounced its independence. It has sold it off for advantages of all sorts. And Italy counts for very little. It knows less than one century as a united independent country."

Mediterranean Policy

At this point, according to my notes, I had a feeling that De Gaulle "was going on in this historical reminiscence," so I interrupted and asked if the ultimate aim of his present (1969) policy was to neutralize the Mediterranean, expelling both the American and Soviet fleets. He sald:

"The Mediterranean is a sea As a sea, it is open to everyone, to all ships. But we think that the concentration of a big appearance of a big Soviet fleet do not constitute anything good for beace.

"However, if an international detente can he brought about, there will no longer be any reason for a permanent U.S. fleet stationed in the Mediterranean. And at that point that would reduce the reason for the presence of a Soviet fleet. Naturally, American and Russian vessels could continue to pass through the Mediterranean but they would no longer have reason for stationing large, permanent, naval concentrations there."

I asked how long he thought American troops should remain stationed in Europe. He replied: "Until there is a real East-West détente it is obviousiv normal to keep American troops in Germany. But if there is a real [and I underline this because he stressed it with his voicel détente, there would be no more reason for such detachments except for symbolic units. But the fact that you have troops in Germany now doesn't irritate us; so have we." . .

I inquired as to whether he had any suggestions about how the recurring Berlin crises such as the one now just shaping up could be avoided. He said: Unfortunately, this situation cannot end soon. The situation is entirely abnormal. The Bonn government wants to consider West Berlin as entirely a part of West Germany. But this is not true. And West Berlin is not East German either. ...

Western' Area

"It is a 'Western' area in tho sense of what its people wish. The real sovereignty of Berlin was awarded to the victors of World War II. But the Russiens abandoned their position and went over to their own side of Berlin. Therefore, the only good sense would be to maintain the situation as it is until the German question can be tiled.

I must confess that the settled. West German government tends to exaggerate. It is not worth the trouble involved to provoke an Bastern reaction by holding presidential elections in West Berlin. The allies you, we and the British-have the responsibility of sovereignty. [France] gave a reluctant yes when the question [elections in West Berlin] was put to us. This was really a mistake. We should have looked at the question squarely and said no. That would have avoided the present

I then told De Gaulle I had been in Moscow in December (1969) and had read the official Soviet account of his conversations with Stalin in December, 1944. In this account he was quoted as saying: "French policy compels Frenchmen to desire first of all a mutual assistance pact with the Soviet Union. Was this still true? I inquired He answered:

When Germany is a danger yes If there is a German danger, we would have to have an alliance. You must remem-ber how much both Russia and France suffere. from Germany. If Germany were to become a big power militarily, economically-and in a nuclear sensethen we would have to have an alliance. Neither of us can accept a dangerous Germany," I asked the general if it were true that France intended to send troops to Lebanon. He replied in the negative—but by no means as vigorously as I had anticipated. He then added: "If Israel-were to attack Lebanon. we would not let it fall. We would take action. Wo insist that it etand."

Neutral on Mideast

I asked if France considered itself neutral as between Is-raelis and Arabs, in the sense that it would support either side if it were attacked by the other. He said: "Yes. In 1967. I told Israel not to attack. I also told the same to the Arabs. We told both sides that we would hold either one responsible if it attacked the other. I remarked that he had

"Each had or has a stre personality and that is defini good. I include Nixon, c tainly. But now we will how he is as a president. is just beginning his mande He has all that is needed in personality to be a strong pr ident."

As a final question, I as him to analyze his own car-He said: "Because of ever I started from a very, very beginning. It was a very rible situation, a desper situation from which I beg This was not true for the oth It wasn't true at all for R sevelt. Churchill was in dangerous situation, but no desperate one. Charles de Gaulle in an age before the flood—an age when Titans wrestled amid smoke and fire and roared defiance at one another against a counterpoint of crashing bombs. And in truth he was the last of that wartime breed (If one excepts Chiang Kai-shek on his distant island)—a breed that was so powerful for good or ill.

Among them-Roosevelt, Churchill, Stalin, Hitler, Mussolini-Charles de Gaulle made his mark without a state, without a treasury. with only the sketchiest of armies. He did so by force of personality and, above all, by the force of his idea of France. In the ashes of a great defeat, his strong prose and stronger posture stirred a great flame. Like the Duke of Reichstadt on the fields of Wagram, he could evoke a dream of marching men and waving banners-but De Gaulle was no weakling, born out of his time. He made the men real, and the banners victorious.

He did not die in the ruins, like Hitler and Mussolini, or on the eve of triumph, like Roosevelt, or amid the dark passions of an anachronistic web of power, like Stalin. Rather, it seemed, like Churchill, he was to be relegated to that Valhalla where used-up heroes languish when their day is passed. And, like Churchill, he confounded his critics to return, in a quite different context, to head the state he had eaved.

And in that second avatar, he saved the state again. He did so by an apparent contradiction. The onetime defender of the French Empire sacrificed the Empire for France itself, and then held the nation together against those to whom France seemed inconceivable without the tribute and rule of lands across the eeas.

In the process, Charles de Gaulle profoundly and perhaps—only perhaps—permanently altered the political structure and political institutions of France, He outraged many of Often he seemed like some lonely survivor his former supporters and allenated allies of long standing. Storms of protest swirled around his head-storms of criticism followed most of his words and acte. Rebuffed in one of the referenda which he seemed to prefer to the other electoral processes of his Constitution, he resigned.

Charles de Gaulle remains a political enigma to many. There is still room for much argument over his foreign and domestic policies, over the trends he encouraged in France and in the world. Whether these trends, toward nationalism and a measure of authoritarianism, will, on balance, be better for his country and its neighbors, time alone may be able to decide with any degree of finality.

"Grandeur" is a word capable of many interpretations, in a man or a nation, and De Gaulle was, by common consent, neither greatly interested nor particularly competent in what related to the common life of men in how they earned their living, or for what pay. The result of De Gaulle's halfcontempt for the bread-and-butter issues lingers on in France.

Thus at the moment when this last of the Titans has passed from the world stage, even these vital questions do not loom so large as some memories: of a tall young general of brigade in Carlton Gardens; of a voice that epoke so eloquently to his countrymen: of De Gaulle striding into Notre Dame to praise his God for victory, while shots echoed above the chanting of the choir; of the president who held the helm of state so firmly in the army revolt against his Algerian

The critical minds can find many flaws in the career of Charles de Gaulle, but none in his integrity of mind and spirit. And few who have lived through these troubled years, whatever their country or language, can find it in their hearts not to be grateful for his vital presence among us.

Bergson explains the role of intelligence and analysis. He saw how necessary it is to analyze questions in search of truth. But intellect alone cannot act.

> "The intelligent man does not automatically become the man of action . . . Bergson showed me that action comes from the combination, the combined application of intellect and instinct, working together. All my life I have been aware of this essentially important explanation. Pure intellect cannot by itself produce action and impulse, can produce folly if it alone serves as a guide."

De Gaulle admired les gens efficaces, those who accomplished things, among whom he numbered Charlemagne, Joan of Arc. Poincare, Clemenceau, Washington, Jefferson, Theodore and Franklin Roosevelt, Bismarck and Churchill.

The general, as he was known even while president, always showed unusual courage—as belitted his original profession of soldier. Under Puritanical Young Leaders

Uptight in Libya

By William Tuohy

TRIPOLI, Libya.-On the streets of Tripoli recently. Libyan police splashed red paint on the legs of young women whose skirts were deemed improperly short.

Young men with overly long hair were summarily hustled into police stations and shorn with clippers. Other young men were warned about wearing too-tight trousers or looking "effeminate." And girls were advised on the radio about wearing sleeveless dresses and using too much makeup and jewelry.

Everyone got the message, The streets of Tripoli, where a quarter of Libya's population of 1.8. million live, are gray and colorless today.

what they are doing."
Since taking power, the young Libyan officers have concentrated on foreign affairs and ridding their country of what they consider to be the last vestiges of colonialism.

Stagnant Economy

The enormous royalties from the big Western oil producers have been piling up in the treasury at a rate of a billion dollars a year. Yet the Libyan economy is stagment, construc-tion is at a standstill, and the port listless.

The young officers in charge called a halt to all major construction projects that were launched by the government of the deposed King Idris and most of these projects are still held in abeyance.

"The government is taking a hard look at the worthiness of all the various projects," said one Western diplomat, "but one of these days they are going to. have to come to grips with this faltering economy, and get it moving again."

If the economy has been winding down due to the insttention or inability of the government, the new regime has made long strides in other direc-

Further, Libya nationalized the domestic oil distribution system and the country is moving in the direction of assuming more control of the entire oilproducing industry—to the dis-may of the American oil com-

Council in Command

In doing all this, the Revolutionary Command Council, that is, the dozen young army officers who led the revolution, appear to have strengthened their hold on the country.

Observers here say there is no opposition to the revolutionary government to speak of and that Col Moamer Kazafuy, chairman of the Revolutionary Command Council, seems to be in a firm position.

Col. Kazafuy, 28, bas raised hackles elsewhere in the Arab world because of his impulsive barnstorming around the area and his penchant for telling other Arab leaders where to

Boost for Bonn's Coalition

For a party often derided as a political corpse, West Germany's Free Democrats showed unexpected life and strength in the Hesse state election. The most important result is the removal of the immediate threat of collapse that hung over Chancellor Brandt's federal government coalition.

It would have been no great surprise if the Free Democrats had dropped below 5 percent in Hesse and thus been shut out of the state parliament there, as they were in Saarland and Lower Saxony last May. This might have caused enough additional defections in the Bundestag-three FDP deputies deserted to opposition ranks last monthto wreck Mr. Brandt's coalition.

In the event, the Free Democrats polled 10 ing an additional seat in the parliament. They will now team up with Mr. Brandt's Social Democrats to form the same coalition in Hesse that governs in Bonn.

The election was a mixed blessing for Mr. Brandt, however, The Social Democrats lost their absolute majority, polling only 46 percent, while the Christian Democrats climbed 13 points to 40 percent. But many Christian Democratic gains came from the ultra-rightwing National Democratic party, which polled only 3 percent and lost all its eight seats in the parliament.

Mr. Brandt's coalition has survived a year with a majority of only 12 in a Bundestag men passing grandeur-much apof 496. It may yet serve out its four-year constitutional term with a majority reduced to six, particularly if the Free Democrats take heart from the Hesse results and if a percent, almost matching their showing in hitter struggle over party leadership con-Hesse's last state election and actually gain- tinues inside the Christian Democratic

Charles de Gaulle

Few men wanted more than he, from his youth until his death, to be identified with France. Let us hope that Piutarch was wrong when he eaid that ingratitude toward its great men is the mark of a strong nation. -From Le Monde (Paris).

He was a general who despised generals, an intellectual who loathed intellectuals, and an anthoritarian who loved democracy but most of all he loved France.

The Vote in Germany

The good results [achieved by Chancellor Brandt'sl coalition partners, the Liberals, in Hesse have saved his government from the blow that was feared. The Liberals kept their position surprisingly well. The small coalition partner of Brandt's Social Democrats is-for the time being-saved from further eroslon.

The Christian Democratic gains were mainly from former NPD voters. By this development the CDU, in accordance with its brutal election campaign, becomes increasingly a rallying point of rightists. But Brandt'e political base in Bonn remains small.

-From Algemeen Dagblad (Rotterdam).

The FDF success can be explained only by the fact that the Hesse election constituted a vote for or against the Bonn coalition. The CDU had launched attacks against the Brandt-Schoel cabinet with the objective of pushing the FDP out of the Hessian state legislature and thus speeding up the erosion of the ruling government's slim majority in the federal parliament.

The FDP gain contradicted most preelection predictions and polls. In both north and south Hesse, people who normally vote Social Democratic obviously cast their lot for the threatened FDP.

New Arab Federation

The announcement that Egypt, Sudan, and Libya are preparing some new form of political union is bound to be greeted with good deal of skepticism. If this is to be just a loose federation it would not seem to go beyond the present close alliance between the three states. If it is to be something more the chances are that it will not work-or not for long. Of course the three countries now involved have some advantages lacking in previous attempts at union. Even without Nasser Egypt is bound to be the dominant partner in the trio. She has the numbers, the experience, the reputation which the others lack. The purpose of the federation announcement seems mainly psychological.

What is not clear is whether this new move means that Jordan and the so-called "eastern front" are being left to look after themselves. Are Jordan and Egypt now free to go their separate ways to reach an accommodation with Israel?

-From Tie Times (London).

An Arab federation of Egypt, Lioya and the Sudan appears to be a serious proposition. It is an odd marriage of the senior with the most junior of Arab governments. What unites these three now is the need to form a new Arab leadership, lacking since the death of President Nasser. But the triumvirate of Anwar Sadat, Numeiry and Cadaffi will not be a happy one if the hotheads predominate.

They will never forget what they owe to your brilliant leadership of the Allied Armies in the final struggle."

distressing is that American politicians consider personal vilification of their opponents an integral part of their campaigns, with the result that they spend more time and money on researching the personal hebits and dealings of the adversary than on the problems of the region and the nation which they claim to wish to represent. This has the dual effect of leaving candidates uninformed about vital issues end insuring that whoever succeeds will enter Congress or the state governments with the stains from the mud siung at him by bis defeated opponent still showing. What is worse is that the American people are made fools of, since they can be sure that by the time the next election rolls around, a large heap of choicest mud will be awaiting the incumbents, who feel that they have to reply, thus per-

How Thin Is 'Paper'?

A Washington Post article (IHT Nov. 3) called President Nixon's victory in 1968 "a paper-thin victory," although the margin over Mr. Humphrey was 499,704 votes. This, of course, was apart from the 9,906,141 votes taken by Mr. Wallace in the five Southern states. Now, what might be the proper expression for the majority of only 119,450 votes Obtained in the 1960 election by the late President Kennedy over Mr. Nixon? Perhaps an ethereal one?

BASIL PETROYANNIS.

WASHINGTON.-By no mere law and order actually harmed panded the money supply to the point where it is growing at 5 percent annually. He would almost certainly resist any further rise as inflationary. And his resistance would find powerful support in Wall Street and among the financial leaders so important to the Republican party.

To be sure, the money supply could be increased with minimal inflationary impact if the administration were prepared to set guidelines on wages and prices. But the President's chief economic adviser, Director George Shultz of the Office of Budget and Management, is a dishard opponent of interference with the market mechanism in the setting of prices and wages.

A second way to expand the economy is through more federal spending. Any number of projects, from increased Social Security benefits through more housing, are ready to go. But a rise in spending would mean a deficit in the budget for next year. A major deficit already impends for this year. The deputy director of the Office of Management and Budget. Caspar Weinberger, opposes deficits with the passionate fury of those who liken federal spending to family spending. And his views would find a potent response among many Republican votersparticularly older persons living on fixed incomes. - - -

Room for Cuts No doubt any deficit could be cut by reductions in defense and foreign spending—notably through a more rapid winding-down of the big American troop commitments to Vietnam, Korea and Western Europe. But the President and bis chief foreign policy adviser, Henry Kissinger, have insisted that any reduction of American forces be slow, discriminating, and matched by commensurate reductions on the Communist side. And Secretary of Defense Melvin Laird, once a strong proponent of defense cutbacks, seems now to be going for more military spending.

With so many administration figures so deeply committed, President Nixon will be picking his way cautiously among the various alternatives. Almost certainly he will try to saddle the Democrate with the blame for whatever goes wrong. The only other sure thing is that there will be a long period of pulling and hauling within the administration-with some cabinet resignations almost certain—as the President gropes for a new handle on the economy in the next few

U.S. Scientists Develop Bacteria That Eat Up Oil Slicks on Water

TALLAHASSEE, Fla., Nov. 10 (AP) —American scientists say they have developed potent strains of bacteria that gobble up oil-then quietly die off.

"We knew that certain types of bacteria have been breaking down oil for millions of years," said Prof. Carl Oppenheimer, of Florida State University.

"So we looked in likely places where oil had been spilled for a long time and came up with several promising strains. We gave them a culture medium that stimulated their activities. Actually, what we had to do was fortify and enhance their natural appetites," he said. The product of two years of research is several strains of bacteria that destroy "Bunker C fuel oil, one type of California crude and one type of Louisiana crude," Prof. Oppenheimer said.

"It may turn out that we must find other bacteria to feed on Kuwait and Venezuelan oils, but I'm sure they will be there if we need them," he said.

Prof. Oppenheimer said the bacteria could be mass-produced by methods similar to those used to make penicillin, then freezedried and stored until needed to combat oil slicks.

DARIS, Nov. 10 .- Tves Saint Laurent, who launched the long look and, with it, a major midi-mini-maxi controversy, has made a group of short dresses for his spring-summer Rive Gauche (ready-to-wear) collection. "I felt like seeing legs again," he said

"But," he hastened to add. the noureau court (new short) is for young, avant-garde girls" (who, presumably, were the first ones to go long and are finding out now that it is not winning them any added atten-

The new short dresses that Saint Laurent discussed during a preview are soft, slinky and definitely sexy in a campy, American pop poster way. Thus far seen only by selected buyers and the influential American trade paper, Women's Wear Daily, the collection of 64 ensembles will go on sale in February, 1971.

A direct steal from the '40s, the new short dresses are worn with pouty red lips, curly hair, crimson fingernails and platform shoes. Saint Laurent said they are provocantes iprovoca-"The shoes are very important," he insisted, "They change the wbole look."

For women old enough to remember, the shoes are the ugly wedgies of the sad war years. "I adore them," Saint Laurent said, smiling through his beard. "I can't explain why. All young girls adore

. The Market

Asked if he didn't think that to come up with short skirts now will confuse the international ready-to-wear market, Saint Laurent said, defensively, "I don't care. I'm not the guardian angel of the clothing industry. I know that, as far as my boutiques are concerned, they (long skirts) are doing extremely well."

Seint Laurent, it must be said, was feeling rather edgy because of a recent, unsigned article in Women's Wear Dally, which said, a propos of the forthcoming Rive Gauche collection, that the designer was "a hit confused." Women's Wear has been held responsible for pushing the long look, or "longuette" as they call it, down the throats of American manufactuerers and consumers alike. So Saint Laurent took the article, as well as a sketch that appeared with it, as resent-revealed that only 10 percent of the men and 10 percent of the women queried were for the midi. In England, the Daily Mirror conducted a survey and found that 78 percent of those polled were against the long look, In France, there's the same furor, with editorials claiming that "the mini skirt has lost a battle, it hasn't lost the war."

Could it be that the designers, aware of the resistance, are trying to ease out of a sticky situation? Saint Laurent claims that short skirts are just for a young, svant-garde minority. But, at the risk of sounding square, doesn't that mean that the large majority of women. who are trying to keep up, are already out before they are

The truth is that skirts cannot go up all of a sudden for the simple reason that the couturiers will lose face and the industry, having switched to long, will really lose its shirt this time. The machinery is en route and it will take at least a year for everybody, including the customer, to back out. Meanwhile, skirts are going slowly, but surely, up.

ARCHAEOLOGY....

'Aphrodite's' Finde Refutes U.K. Critic.

NEW YORK, Nov. 10 (NYT).

-Iris C. Love entering a rebuttal yesterday to British critics of her claim to have found the head of the famed Aphrodite of Chidus in the British Museum basement, said that their attribution of the head to Persephone, the daughter of Demeter, the earth goddess, could not be supported.

"In the absence of any attribute of Persephone, such as her tall-crowned hat, a poppy, a sheaf of grain or a pomegranate, such an identification is not possible," said the New York archaeologist. Miss Love, who has been excavating Cuidus in Turkey for the past four years, last year discovered the temple of Aphrodite. The controversial head was found in 1859 by Sir Charles Newton in the precincts of the shrine of Demeter. A statue of the earth goddess was found there, nearly intact, as was a figure in good condition of the sorrowing Demeter.

According to Sir Charles's report of his expedition, the head at issue was found along with the hand of a colosse statue, extremities of statues and a large miscellany of other broken material, Miss Love said. Sir Charles saw evidence of great havoc, either by an earth-quake or "the band of man."

A Question .

"If there had been an earthquake, why could only two statues and those nearly intact-be assembled from the tremendous jumble of arms, legs and other portions of statues found there?" inquired Miss Love.

She continued, "From Newton's description, Demeter'e sanctuary appears to have been used as a repository for broken gods and goddesses, perhaps for sacred burial after a calamity." A precedent for such burial exists in numerous cases. Miss Love sald, citing the interment of the celebrated bronze statue of the charioteer at Del-

Persephone has always been represented as a young girl. Miss Love said. The head, found in the earth goddess's precinets, is that of a young, but mature woman, the archaeologist said. Sir Charles Newton described it as being of "fine" quality, an estimate that has not been contradicted since.

Experimental Drama At House of Molière

DARIS. Nov. 10.-The Comedie-Française ie toying with the avant-garde drama this week. On Friday it will offer a program of three new playe by three "new" authors following two performances before subscribers.

The most substantial piece is that of Billetdoux, who wrote the international success "Chin-Chin." In this play—"Femmes Parallèles"—we are treated to the spectacle of three women, each of a different social milieu, as they await in vain the arrival of their beaux. The lowly prostitute continually adjusts her makeup and wardrobe; the prayer; and the third lady-in-waiting eases her anxiety by sipping wine. Denise Gence. London's No.1 terminal...for Europe's No.1 airline...naturally.

You're looking at the No.1 Passenger Terminal at London Airport. Certainly the most modern passenger terminal in Britain, probably in Europe, and possibly in the world.

It was specially built for BEA passengers by the British Airports Authority. Tailormade to suit our requirements—and yours. (The same way we had the Trident built-the world's only made-to-measure passenger plane. You can afford this kind of perfectionism when you're as big as BEA.)

So in No. 1 Terminal you can count on the smoothest possible service. A fully computerised reservation and check-in system. An automatic baggage system, monitored through closed-circuit television, to get your luggage through to you quickly. A loudspeaker system that actually lets you hear the flight announcements. Full soundproofing and air-conditioning. A comprehensive shopping arcade. Transfers to Inter-Britain flights within the terminal. All in a spacious, comfortable relaxed environment.

And here's the catch—we're keeping it all to ourselves. Only if you fly to or from the Continent with BEA will you get to use No.1 Terminal. How unfair can you get?

No.1 in Europe

The 1971 World Championship for the Bermuda Bowl, to be played in Taipei, Taiwan, in May, promises to be the most dramatic in the 20-year history of the event. In the absence of the great Italian Blue Team now permanently disbanded, at least four of the six have a real chance to capture the world title. Europe will be represented by France, which captured the European Championship title in Portugal ten days ago. The French team includes Pierre Jais and Roger Trezel, the only partnership to win all three major world titles-world olympiad pairs, world olympiad teams and the Bermuda Bowl

Equally formidable will be the Australian team, which recently won the Far East title. However, the Far East will nevertheless have its own team in the world championship, and it will be mainly Chinese. The South American championship, to be played shortly, will determine the representatives of that

For the first time ever, the United States will heve two teams. The professional Dallas Aces will play as defending champions, and will have a much harder task to retain their title than they had in winning it in Stockholm this year.

The North American zonal representatives will be Lew Mathe, Don Krauss, Dick Walsh and John Swanson, all of Los Angeles, Edgar Kaplan of New York, and Norman Kay of Philadelphia. The diagramed deal contributed to the success of the Californians in a quali-

BOOKS

THE EDWARDIANS

By J.B. Priestly. Harper and Row. Illustrated, 302 Reviewed by Michael Holroyd

THE Edwardian Age dawned one day in 1901, at the moment when J. B. Priestley, though "only a child," testified to the extraordinary popularity of the new king. Unit now this king has always been familiarly known as Bertie, but "I shall call him Edward," Priestley announces in his chapter mysteriously entitled "Young Bertle"—and he adds that "it would be cheating" to write of the age "while attempting to keep out" the person who happened to give it his name.

The temptation to do so must have been considerable, for it appears from this original study that the most important personage of these times, far from being King Edward, was none other than J. B. Priestley himself. Curiously absent from the book's companion volume, Prince of Pleasure and His Regency. Priestley here comes into his own. "As I have said hefore," he repeats, "we are all in history." But some of us, of course, are more in than others.

Priestley is an extreme example of this thrusting process.

Again and again history has overtaken him unawares. It was he who, one day on the Isle of Wight, made the historical discovery of just how thick Princess Beatrice's German accent was; and it was he who, while in the country near a railway station, received the historical news of Edward's appendicitis. As if this were not enough, the book is crowded with many other such momentous scenes, pregnant with per-sonal history. There are de-scriptions of J. B. Priestley hinching and dining, playing the plane and playing tennis; of Lord Kitchener being inspected at Aldershot by J. B. Priestley, and of J. B. Priestley inspecting the dockers at Copenhagen. Such is the force of this man's presence that even his absence becomes, somehow a positive accomplishment. Several times, for example, we are informed in Italics of his remoteness from Edwardian high society; and elsewhere he frankly admits he is no ballet dancer. On the other hand, he is a writer who knows the literature of the period exceptionally well, and ha gives us a number of interesting quotations from such authoritative works as "Literature and Western Man" and "Margin Released," as well as significant references to "Bright Day." In his preface, the author remarks on the curious fact that "I keep popping up in this chronicle." And he gives us his, explanation: "The publishers... insisted that I should." We are invited to see Mr. George Rainbird, Mr. Charles Pick of Heine-Mr. Cass Canfield converging upon darkest Bradford, where Priestley lives, and during hinch persuading him with some difficulty to overcome his natural modesty. In their efforts, these publishers have been remark-ably successful, but for the sake of the book it would have been better had they failed. None of this foolishness would

Laurel Race Tough to Pick in Any Language

Situation Is Fluent at International

By Fred Feldkamp

LAUREL RACE COURSE, Laurel, Md. Nov. 10.—The atmosphere in the International Village here this morning, on the day before the $150,000 Washington, D.C., International horse race, was of about the same intensity as that generated when Soviet Chairman Khrushchev visited the United Nations. For this compound, endowed with its own hixury barn and walking ring, is a UN in miniature, with a strong security, force.

Wisps of provocative conversations about the prospects for the starters in tomorrow's big race were in the air for conscientious multilingual eavesdroppers who managed to get past the guards. In general all the training complement present in the area were playing it cool. Favored Fort Marcy, who worked five-eighths of a mile yesterday on the main track at New York's Belmont Park in 59 3/5 seconds, was playing it coolest of all: the 6-year-old gelding who has scored one victory in this classic three years ago, and one third-place finish, is treating this event like any other race and prefers to stay in one of the regular barns, outside this enclave, in the company of houses who are competing in day-in-day-out events on normatrace days:

Oozing Confidence

Charlie Whittingham, trainer of second-choice Fliddle Isle, said, after a lethargic earlymorning workout by his charge "My horse is ready—he just doesn't like to work unless he has to. But in the afternoon on race days be's something else again," he added contentedly. All the trainers in the village were oozing confidence, in several languages.

The victory, which will be worth $100,000 to the winner, $25,000 to the second horse, $10,000 for third and $5,000 each for the next three across the line, will be sought after by ten horses representing eight countries this year, on the 1-1/2mile turf course here.

Third choice in the race, which will be run tomorrow just a stone's throw from this security-oriented area, is England's 5-year-old Lorenzaccio, winner of five European tests this year including the Cham-Stakes at Newmarket where he defeated the highlyesteemed Nijinsky last month.

Tomorrow's race will mark tha first collaboration in some years between trainer Noel Murless, who formerly schooled the queen's horses, and Lester Piggott, winner of the last two editions of the International on Sir Ivor and Karabas.

Sealed Orders?

Not many here are aware of the drama in the situation. The split between Murless and Piggott, seven-times British champion jockey, was not a friendly one, and Piggott agreed to take the mount on Lorenzaccio on the condition that he wouldn't be required to talk to trainer Murless until just before the race, (Perhaps Murless will hand Piggott sealed orders?) Many connoisseurs of horseflesh feel that Piggott has an excellent chance to make it three in a row, but it is worth keeping in mind that this will be Lorenzaccio's first 1 1/2-mile effort. "But I say, old boy," said a British visitor here last night, "a mile and three-eighths, with thet hill at Longchamp, is about equal to a mile and a half here." He was referring to the Prix Foy at Longchamp in September, when Lorenzac-clo finished half a length in front of Beaugency. The French horse, a 4-year-old trained by Alec Head, will also be in the starting gate bere tomorrow at about 4 o'clock. He will be ridden by. Alec's son Freddy, currently giving Yves Saint-Martin a hot race for the French jockey championship this year. This morning Freddy had his first look at an American track.

The extra furlong might just tip the balance in Beangency's favor; he finished a short head behind Goodly, winner of the French Derby (Prix du Jockey Club) last year and placed sixth in this year's Prix de l'Arc de Triomphe. Both horses, from all sppearance this morning, are in top form, in whatever language you care to choose.

"Ca va." said the French lad who did six furlengs up on France's 3-year-old filly, Miss Dan, third in this year's Arc de Triomphe. (Her sire, Dan Cupid, also sired the unforgettable Sea-Bird.)

"She had a rough flight from Europe, but she has settled down and is training well." said trainer Philippe Lallie. "She's at her best." "Esta listo y espero una buena carrera," said trainer Eduardo Aspurpa Sosa of his Venezuelan champion 3-year-old colt. Senain his home country. But tomorrow's stiff test will be Senador's first experience on grass.

Tall Grass

"Alles ist in bester ordnung mit dem deutschen pjerd Cortez," said West German trainer Sven Von Mitzlaff. Both Venezuelan and German trainers commented on the height of the grass on the turf courses; Herr Von Mitziaff ventured the opinion that it was so tall

Caesar, an acronym for Computer Animated Episodes Single Axis Rotation, has already gone to work on B.C.'s apteryx.

Caesar the Computer to Animate Cartoons

By Wayne Warga BEVERLY HILLS, Calif.—They're in the business of expanding reality and altering images. They're being quite secretive about it. One would assume, in this image-altered world, that they're either dope peddlers or political

The computer in the film "2001: A Space Odyssey" was named Hal. This particular group of fast-thinking businessmen here are calling theirs Caesar, an acronym for "Computer Animated Episodes Single Axis Rotation."

Caesar goes into operation in January and it could cause quite an upbeaval in the animation business. Caesar will produce full-length animated cartoon features in a couple of months instead of the several years required by conventional animation, such as that pioneered by the late Walt Disney.

Caesar will do other things as well. A political cartoon can be fed into Caesar's circuits and emerge in two hours as an animated short subject in full color.

A Revolution

Bruce L. Birchard, president of Computer Image Corp., the progenitor of Caesar, feels his company is on the verge of causing a revolution in the animation

"But always," he qualifies, "with an artist up front. If you can state the feeling you want to convey, the statement you want to make, then people and machines can go to work. It depends on how articulate you are at conveying your

Caesar lives in Denver just now, but the company has already made what they call a feasibility film

They took an episode of the comic strip "B.C.," and put such characters as the apteryx into action. The characters don't merge perfectly with the back-ground, but Mr. Birchard and friends are fixing that up now.

The lips of the characters move in perfect synchronization. As the voice track is fed into the computer, it makes the lips work in synch; even lets out a yell if that's what the dialogue does.

The late Walt Disney ... in his time, many years.

"What is most significant is that our system will reduce the cost and time involved in animation and thus bring it hack into many areas which no longer can afford animation," Mr. Birchard says. "Industrial and educational animation are two very important areas.

"We've just completed a learn-to-count series for 'Sesame Street' (an educational television series) which will go on the air this spring. It is completely animated by computer."

The "Sesame Street" films have a very computerized look about them, with only voices giving the film reality. Yet the images dance and form numbers, then groups of images to start the learning

According to Mr. Birchard, the system will work something like this:

The animator will produce short animated sequences and observe them as he produces them. They will be presented in color on a TV monitor for his observation so that he can change the nature of the ammation to suit his desires. He sees the changes as they occur. When he is satisfied with a sequence, he will press a button which will store the information in a digital computer storage bank and then he will move on to the next sequence. When he has finished each sequence to his satisfaction, he can play the whole thing back through the monitor in a con-tinuous fashion to check the total program. If the total is satisfactory, he will run the program through once more, this time recording it on film or videotape. Then, he's done.

"In effect, this process allows the animator to pre-edit and only record the finished program. As the business is presently structured, there are animators. assistant animators and in-betweeners, who color and draw. We will eliminate assistants and in-betweeners, freeing them, if they're creative, for things other than inking and painting."

Mr. Birchard's confidence comes from other computers which logically pointed them toward Caesar and heyond

First came Scanimate, which in effect is a form of computerized graphic manipulation. A photograph, transparency, film sequence or some other object is photographed by the computer proces and then manipulated, altering both the design and shape. There are Scanimaters working in Beverly Hills, New York and Denver.

Next came Animac, the first machine to generate all of its images internally. Animac also introduced sound modulation for lip synchronization, though it uses a much simpler process than Caesar will have.

Scanimate and Animac have already produced title sequences for television series-in a record eight hours instead of ten weeks. The phenomenon was subsequently repeated in the title sequence for the film "Getting Straight." The computers have also programmed a large number of commercials.
